Most Interesting Tidbit

HP is the world's leading digital printing company. For decades, it has been at the cutting edge of printing technology, including 3D printers and bioprinters. Their bioprinters, which use the same technology as their iconic inkjet printers, are used by the CDC to print pharmaceutical samples and slow the spread of illness.

Our Favorite Review

"HP believes and practices diversity whether gender, sexual orientation, veteran or any other type of special classification. There are business groups on campuses all over the world the promote the diversity in very real and actionable ways. As a straight heterosexual woman I have walked with other HP employees in the PRIDE parade for the last three years. As an ALLY to the LGBTQI community, I proudly display the ALLY flag in my work space without fear of retribution or consequence. Each business group around the world has an executive sponsor and ours is an openly gay vice president who proudly walks in the PRIDE parade. I was only 1.5 years with the company when I was nominated to take part in our Catalyst program designed to help under-represented groups, such as women in leadership positions, to gain the confidence to take risks and have their voices and presence known inside the company. HP definitely walks the talk about supporting diversity in our workforce, encouraging diversity of opinion and offering opportunities to continue to grow, whether through education or new roles inside the company."
